Personal values

Session 1 of a three-session values group, adapted from the Personal Values Card Sort.

Values are not rules, and they are not goals. A goal is something you can finish and check off, like getting the certificate or paying off the card. A value is a direction you keep choosing for as long as you're alive. Nobody ever finishes being a caring person or an honest one.

That's what makes values useful when life is hard. Goals can be taken from you. Directions can't.

The next two pages list 83 values, each with a short meaning, under seven headings. The headings are only there to make the list easier to read. A value could fit under more than one, so go by what each word means to you.

Before you start

- There are no right answers. Nobody grades this, and nobody has to see it.
- You may feel a pull to pick what you think you should value, such as what your family valued or what would sound best said out loud in this room. If you feel it, set it aside and choose for yourself.
- If a value stings because you've lost touch with it, don't read that as failure. The sting usually means it still matters to you.
- You never have to share your list. If you talk in the group, you can talk about what this was like without saying what you chose.

How it works

1. First pass, check. Read through all seven headings at your own pace. Check the box next to anything that matters to you at all. Don't limit yourself. Most people check 25 to 35.
2. Second pass, star. Go back through only what you checked and star the ones that are very important, the ones you'd call core. Most people end up with 10 to 20. If you're well past 20, go back and take some stars away.
3. Choose five and describe them. From your starred values, choose the five you'd keep if you could keep only five, and number them 1 to 5. Next to each, write what it looks like when you're living it.
4. Notice. Before the next session, notice one moment each day when one of your five shows up, even briefly, and write it down.
